GH Lab pros added new picks from Casaluna, West Elm and Sijo. If you're a hot sleeper, a comfortable night's sleep can feel impossible (even with the best sleep products). Blasting the AC and skyrocketing your electric bill is not the only solution: Dressing your bed with cooling sheets can help you get quality shut-eye and stay cozy all night long. The Good Housekeeping Institute Textiles Lab regularly tests to find the best sheets of all types, from cotton sheets to organic sheets and beyond. In Lab tests, we check for durability, strength, shrinkage, moisture-wicking capabilities and pilling. We also have consumer testers weigh in on the softness of each sheet set. Our favorite cooling sheets, below, are from brands with excellent Lab performance, as well as picks with high reviews from real customers and unique features like cooling phase-change technology to prevent night sweats, moisture-wicking fabrics and super lightweight and breathable construction. For best results, pair your cooling sheets with a cooling pillow, cooling mattress protector, cooling comforter or cooling blanket. In Lab evaluations, fiber scientists wash all sheets according to the care label to rate shrinkage, wrinkle resistance and appearance after laundering. Pros also evaluate the fabric's strength and pilling resistance and use a moisture management tester to assess its ability to wick moisture. Consumer testers give feedback on the sheet set's softness, ease of bed making, smoothness, temperature regulation and more. The moisture management tester pictured here is running a moisture-wicking evaluation of cooling sheets to determine the fabric's ability to wick away moisture to keep you dry and cool. The machine drops a consistent amount of sweat-like solution on a piece of fabric to see how quickly the liquid disperses and dries. What to look for when shopping for the best cooling sheets When shopping for sheets, many are overwhelmed by the surprising amount of fabric options available. While each material has its own pros and cons, our fiber scientists explain which fabrics and features you should look for as a hot sleeper: ✓ Polyester and other synthetics: Synthetic fabrics like polyester and rayon are popular for wicking away moisture while staying silky smooth. For even better performance, look for polyester yarns with added cooling technologies. ✓ Tencel/lyocell: As a regenerated cellulose fiber, these fabrics have a luxuriously silky feel that also feels cool to the touch. ✓ Cotton: While cotton doesn't wick away moisture as successfully as synthetic fabrics, cotton lovers can still find cooler options. Opt for percale weaves, as they're more breathable and airy than sateen picks. ✓ Linen: Like cotton, linen is also a natural fabric that is popular for its loose weave, providing excellent airflow. Note that linen sheets tend to be less soft than other materials. ✓ Specific cooling technologies such as Outlast or 37.5 actually store and release heat throughout the night, so your body stays at a stable temperature. To test how moisture-wicking fabric is (a.k.a. how well the sheets will dissipate sweat to keep you at a more consistent body temperature), you can place a drop of water on it. You'll want the water to immediately spread out and dry quickly, but avoid fabrics where the water beads. They'll feel sweaty! ✓ Thread count refers to the number of yarns in a square inch of fabric, but it shouldn't be a major factor when deciding which cooling sheets to buy. In Good Housekeeping evaluations, thread count did not correlate with performance, but when shopping for 100% cotton, single ply weaves, our tests found that 300-500 is ideal. Are "bamboo sheets" cooling? First, "bamboo sheets" don't really exist! While many brands may sell sheets with "bamboo" fabric, the material doesn't actually contain any bamboo. It's really rayon, which is a synthetic fiber that uses the wood pulp from bamboo and dissolves it in chemicals to the point that it no longer exists in the final fabric. The Federal Trade Commission has sued some companies for false bamboo labeling as the brand needs to list the manufactured name for rayon fibers. Types of rayon include viscose, lyocell and modal, which are known for being moisture-wicking and feeling silky and cool to the touch — ideal for cooling sheets! Avoid any sheet sets with false "bamboo" labeling as the brand is greenwashing and misleading their consumers. Instead, opt for Tencel, lyocell, viscose or modal fabrics with excellent cooling performance. Why trust Good Housekeeping? Emma Seymour is a senior textiles product analyst.
